

Requirement Documents:

Business requirements Documents (BRDs):

Business requirements defines the vision and objective of the project including documentation of customer needs and expectations. The following elements are included with the business requirements:

- The vision of the project.
- Objectives of the project.
- Scope of the project.
- Stakeholders' identifications.

Functional Requirements Documents (FRDs):

Functional Requirements refers to the purpose of the project. A structural FRD reveals the following elements:

- Purpose of the project
- The scope of the project
- Assumptions/Constraints.

Non-functional Requirements Documents (NFRs):

Non-functional Requirements implies how the product works for the business. The components of non-functional requirements are as follows:

- Performance
- Scalability
- Availability
- Security.